Customer Reviews

Is this a "love it or hate it" book? Let's look at some of the negative reviewers assertions. True, the writers ARE biased. They are Christians comparing other beliefs to Christianity. There are "non-judgmental" books on world religions out there, if you like. This book isn't one of them, nor need it be. A bias does not mean what they are saying is wrong, by the way. A "bias" is not necessarily or automatically a bad thing. Some say the book contains errors and so is untrustworthy. In Autumn 2002, most news outlets reported that in 200 years, there would no more blondes; it was reported without question. But for this to occur ALL blondes would either have to choose to or be forced to mate only with dark hair partners. The likelihood of this happening? Zero. Soon, the extinct blonde claim was found to be a hoax, which, strangely, did not get the coverage of the hoax itself. One assumes the reviewers who were so outraged by errors in FFOFT were canceling subscriptions left and right: daily paper, Time, Newsweek, US News, Foxnews, CNN. Why stop there? There are errors everywhere. Bye-bye to college text books. Adios to the encyclopedias. And forget user manuals. Does the book espouse "hate," as one reviewer said? No, but some people are threatened by anything they don't agree with. That doesn't make it hateful. Here's an example of what I consider hateful speech. On 19 November 2002, this news item was on Worldnetdaily.com, "Sheik Abu Hamza, with London's Finsbury Park mosque, tells an audience that non-believers should be killed or sold into slavery 'If a kafir person (non-believer) goes in a Muslim country, he is like a cow, anybody can take him. That is the Islamic law. If a kafir is walking by and you catch him, he's booty, you can sell him in the market.
